
Vocational Rehabilitation Consultants

Vocational Rehabilitation Consultants assist individuals that have been ill or injured and are not able to return to their pre-disability occupation due to physical and/or cognitive limitations, and require support to transition to a different career or job field.

The return to work process includes four important stages:

- Assessment
- Planning
- Implementation
- Evaluation

The stages consider the client's interest, vocational aptitudes, transferable skills, education, work experience and limitations and abilities for return to work.

What is Vocational Rehabilitation?

Vocational Rehabilitation is a client-focused health profession concerned with promoting health and wellness through return to work services.

The primary goal of Vocational Rehabilitation is to enable people to return to suitable, accessible and sustainable employment.

There are 5 phases of Vocational Rehabilitation:

- 1 – Return to pre-injury job*
- 2 – Modify duties, same employer*
- 3 – New employer, same industry*
- 4 – Different industry, current skills*
- 5 – Retrain for new job, in new industry*

Vocational Rehabilitation Consultants achieve this outcome by working with people and communities to utilize suitable vocational objectives based on an analysis of information pertaining to an individual's medical limitations, physical and cognitive abilities, transferable skills, education, and areas of interest.
